Grief and Children, No. 8; Updated June 2018. When a family member dies, children react differently from adults. Preschool children usually see death as temporary and reversible, a belief reinforced by cartoon characters who die and come to life again. Children between five and nine begin to think more like adults about death, yet they still believe it will never happen to them or anyone they love. Grief and Children - nacap.org

It is normal during the weeks following the death for some children to feel immediate grief or persist in the belief that the family member is still alive. However, long-term denial of the death or avoidance of grief can be emotionally unhealthy and can later lead to more severe problems. A child who is frightened about attending a funeral should not be forced to go, but a plan to honor or remember the person is important. Grief and children - Better Health Channel

If you are old enough to love, you are old enough to grieve. Even very young children experience grief and loss. It is important to recognise children's feelings and speak with them honestly and directly about death and grief. Be open and willing to talk with your child about grief and loss.

Remember that the only normal you will ever find is a setting on a dryer. These are

How grief may affect children - Marie Curie

Grief is a process that takes time. Some children seem fine, at least initially, and may even behave better than they did before the death. For example, they may become quieter and calmer. This can be a sign that they're hiding their feelings, putting on a brave face or simply trying not to upset others.

How Children Grieve Persistent myths may stand in the ...

Grief May Be Invisible Many adults, Thomas says, may believe that if children are not visibly grieving, they're not grieving. "Grief is the internal response and mourning is the external response to loss. Kids may not be showing grief on the outside, but they're grieving tremendously on the inside." When a death occurs, children, like adults, Thomas explains, "go into a shocked, numblike state
