Interferon - Wikipedia

Interferons (IFNs) are a group of signaling proteins made and released by host cells in response to the presence of several viruses. In a typical scenario, a virus-infected cell will release interferons causing nearby cells to heighten their anti-viral defenses.

Interferon | Definition of Interferon by Merriam-Webster

Interferon definition is - any of a group of heat-stable soluble basic antiviral glycoprotein cytokines of low molecular weight that are produced by cells exposed usually to the action of a virus, sometimes to the action of another intracellular parasite (such as a bacterium), or experimentally to the action of some chemicals.

Interferon Wikipedia

Les interférons (IFN) sont des protéines (glycoprotéines de la famille des cytokines). Ils sont naturellement produits par les cellules du système immunitaire, mais également par d'autres types cellulaires (cellules dendritiques, mononucléaires, plasmocytaires, etc.) en fonction des sous-types.

Interferon type I - Wikipedia

This subtype of type I IFN was recently described as a pseudogene in human, but potentially functional in the domestic cat genome. In all other genomes of non-feline placental mammals, IFN- is a pseudogene; in some species, the pseudogene is well preserved, while in others, it is badly mutilated or is undetectable.
