From the surgeon's perspective, children can't be thought of as smaller versions of adults. Their smaller size makes it physically more difficult for surgeons to work, and their bodies are less robust than those of adults. They're also prone to conditions and deformities seldom seen in adults, which require

Paediatrics-neonatology - Europe Hospitals

Paediatric medicine is very different from adult medicine as it concerns a developing and constantly evolving organism. Early diagnosis is even more important in this field of medicine, as it is vital to the future health of the child and a determining factor in terms of the medical prognosis. Neonatology is a subspecialty of paediatrics that concerns new-born infants. The paediatrician and Cardiothoracic surgery - Wikipedia
