The corotation of the plasmasphere - ScienceDirect

It is shown that the plasmasphere corotates because of the high conductivity of the ionosphere. Because the conductivity of the ionosphere is greater during the day, there is a different response of the plasmopause (to a magnetic storm) on the night and day sides.

The Roche-Limit of ionospheric plasma and the formation ...

When the thermal particles corotate with the Earth's angular velocity, the 'Roche-Limit' equatorial distance is  $L_r = 5.78 [R_E]$ . When the angular convection velocity is evaluated from the quiet time electric field distribution  $E_3$  of McIlwain (1972),  $L_c$  depends on the local time. Its minimum value is then  $L_c = 4-5$  near 2400 LT, and the plasmopause shape and position satisfactorily fit the
